Additional information

Degree Overview

Through this course you'll study essential areas of legal knowledge such as public law, land law, equity and trusts, contract law, criminal law and tort law. In your final year, you choose from a range of specialist modules, including commercial law, intellectual property law, financial services law, and international law. With the great links the university has with a range of legal, and related, employers in London, you'll have - as a law student - access to a range employability events, including talks and networking opportunities. You'll also have the chance to apply for assistance volunteer lawyers roles on real cases at the university's Legal Advice Centre or apply to assist with the Innocence Project London.

Study Reasons

- This is a Qualifying Law Degree, as recognised by the Bar Standards Board.
- You will have the chance to benefit from guest speakers and networking events with employers, professional bodies and alumni to help your career planning.
- Graduates may choose to go on to undertake the further study and training required in order to qualify to practise as a solicitor or barrister in England and Wales. They can also pursue careers in fields that require graduates with strong analytical and communication skills.
