Additional information

About the major

Explore the laws of nature and the relationship between energy and matter with the Department of Physics. You will have the opportunity to research with award-winning faculty, participate in practical applications such as labs and demonstrations, and develop career skills through internships. We encourage physics majors to study across disciplines, pairing their work with chemistry, biology, or anything else of interest—at the University of Oregon, you have the freedom to choose your own path.

A degree in physics will give you a solid foundation to pursue careers and graduate studies in astrophysics, engineering, teaching, astronomy, medicine, technology, communication, and a host of other disciplines.

A little more info

- The Department of Physics has made undergraduate research a priority, with more than 60 percent of physics juniors and seniors gaining research experience.
- The Advanced Projects Laboratory was designed to provide undergraduates a true research experience, one that can't be taught from a textbook. In the APL, undergraduate physics majors have access to million-dollar research-grade scientific instruments that are only available to graduate students and professors at other universities.
- The Department of Physics operates Pine Mountain Observatory, located 26 miles from Bend, Oregon, which offers a unique opportunity for undergraduates to conduct astronomical research and education.
- Physics classes typically have 15 to 25 students, an optimal size to guarantee individual attention.
