Additional information

Degree Overview

The Visual Communications program offers four tracks: Cinematography, Commercial & Advertising Photography, Design, and Editorial Photography & Photojournalism. Students are encouraged to let their passions drive their focus and academic path, and the program is created to support and foster the individuality of its students and their unique voices and vision. Collaboration with students from various programs across departments is highly encouraged. Students also study entrepreneurship, business, communications law and ethics, as well as develop relevant skills in writing, and presentation.

Study Reasons

Develop your skills in professional settings through internships in Syracuse and across the world during the summer.

Enhance your skills with electives like virtual reality or video editing, or learn more about advertising, public relations or magazine and digital journalism.

Build your career network with successful alumni who regularly visit campus, offer their time to talk about working in the industry, and share internship and job leads.
