Additional information

Degree Overview

Music education majors get a strong foundation in music theory and performance, as well as teaching methods specific to music and the arts. Music education students choose a music emphasis for both performance and conducting/teaching methods courses: brass, choral/general (voice), woodwind, percussion or strings. You can expand your performance skills and experience even more with the performance honors program.

Study Reasons

Begin your first year in a classroom, with multiple placements and student-teaching experiences in a range of urban, suburban and rural settings.

Gain an advantage in a range of fields, from the classroom to the stage, with a dual program in music education with a music emphasis.

Experience our pioneering work in clinical simulations for realistic preprofessional practice, replicating common interactions in school and classroom environments and integrated into your classes to build your skill set and confidence.
