Additional information

Degree Overview

This Integrated Learning Major (ILM) in Law, Society, and Policy introduces students to the interdisciplinary field of law and society. Drawing on a range of courses across the humanities and social sciences, this ILM grounds students in the study of law, legal institutions, the legal dimensions of social life, and the policy process. Students gain an understanding of how the law shapes, and is shaped by, society and how policies are devised and implemented to address social problems.

Study Reasons

Combines a traditional major with coursework in an applied or multidisciplinary field.

Cultivates interests in human rights and in the principles and pursuit of justice.

Prepares students for a variety of careers and for graduate programs in law, public policy and the social sciences.
