Degree Overview

Sociology is the study of society, and the sociologist is equipped with the tools and skills required to understand how societies operate and how individuals can contribute to the building of good societies. Our BSc Sociology programme is carefully designed to develop those skills in our students to become good sociologists and good citizens, equipped with the skills to make positive social impact at work and in the world. Social justice is at the heart of sociological practice at Roehampton, and this degree programme connects with Roehampton's theme of "social justice and inclusivity". The programme incorporates the excellent research, knowledge exchange and impact activities of social scientists at Roehampton, including activism, the voluntary sector and business. This programme is innovative in how it incorporates research-led teaching through assessment, activities and community engagement so that research practice is entwined with the development of transferable skills and sociological knowledge. The degree addresses key issues in global society, including problems related to citizenship, human rights, digital cultures, gender and sexuality, homelessness, migration, the media and our identities. This degree programme also foregrounds the development of key skills and professional practice, drawing on the pioneering research of sociologists on the programme on citizenship, education and key skills.

Study Reasons

- Sociology develops essential skills for working in a variety of industries and businesses including the government and not-for-profit sector. A deep understanding of how societies are built and shaped can also springboard you to roles in the criminal justice system, community development and social work
- The careers that Sociology graduates embark on are often varied. You could also work in the media, for a campaigning organisation, or in marketing and public relations. We are proud that 93% of Roehampton Sociology graduates are in work or further study within six months of graduation (Destinations of Leavers of Higher Education, 2018 results).
- Our dedicated careers team is available to support you from the start of your studies until after you graduate. They will help you build your CV, prepare for interviews, and meet and learn from successful Roehampton graduates working at the top of their careers. You'll also have opportunities to work with our partners across London and beyond, and to attend a Roehampton jobs fair where you can find out about graduate opportunities and meet employers.
