Additional information

About the Programme

The Architectural Design Graduate education process aims to produce various alternative and original solutions based on research and application that examine the issues in the field of architectural design, theory and criticism from different perspectives.

Throughout their professional lives, our graduates are ready to suggest, conduct, conclude and share interdisciplinary and trans-disciplinary researches and works in scientific environments using various approaches, methods and techniques, based on the intersections of architectural design, human sciences, social sciences and natural sciences.

Experiencing alternative architectural design processes, our graduates are equipped to develop the necessary architectural design processes.

By actively discovering and shaping our common future, our ARUCAD Architectural Design Master's program graduates will contribute to the emergence of new professional paths by focusing on design, research and production.
