Degree Overview

Marketing as a business discipline changes continuously, due to the ever-developing range of digital channels and solutions available to target, communicate, and engage with customers. Significant development has also taken place around the availability and access to customer data, online trends and market research, which is very important for understanding customer behaviours and as an important stage of marketing planning.

As well as covering the traditional founding concepts and theories of marketing, you will also develop knowledge in social media marketing, digital marketing, content generation, digital tracking, and data analysis. You will understand the practical side of marketing tools and learn the pros and cons of each, for the professional marketer.

This degree option covers a number of areas, such as global financial markets, corporate finance, risk analysis, international business finance. Professional marketers who have a solid understanding of business finances are attractive to businesses, especially those that can deliver greater results, for less.
