Degree Overview

The Speech, Language, and Hearing Sciences major is a pre-professional program within the liberal arts and sciences curriculum. It provides a broad overview of normal speech, language and hearing development. In addition a variety of speech, language, and hearing disorders are introduced. This major permits the student to apply for graduate studies in one of two specialty areas: audiology or speech-language pathology.

Students who want to learn more about the fields of audiology and speech-language pathology but are unsure about declaring the major are encouraged to take SLHS 1150 Introduction to Communication Disorders. Students may declare the major by going to ppc.uconn.edu.
